TOPIC -----

What happened to the "Set Startup" menu item that was in System 6?

DISCUSSION -----

"Set Startup" under System 6 lets you switch between the Finder and MultiFinder and set certain applications and desk accessories to open automatically when you turn on your Macintosh.

System 7 has added more flexibility to this feature. Using System 7, you can have applications, documents, control panels, desk accessories, or aliases open automatically when you start you Macintosh.

To do this, just put the items you want opened into the Startup Items folder inside the System folder. If you want an application to open at startup but you don't want to move it from its current location, just make an alias of it and put that into the Startup Items folder.
